PART I. ENGLISH FOR POLICE

UNIT 1

Every kind of peaceful cooperation among men is primarily based on mutual trust and only secondarily on institutions such as courts of justice and police.

Albert Einstein

n., pl. police – the governmental department charged with the regulation and control of the affairs of a community, now chiefly the department established to maintain order, enforce the law, and prevent and detect crime. A body of persons making up such a department trained in methods of law enforcement and crime prevention and detection and authorized to maintain the peace, safety, and order of the community.

TEXT 1. THE DEFINITION OF POLICING

The word "Police" means the arrangements made in all civilized countries to ensure that the people keep the peace and obey the law. The word also denotes the force of peace officers (or police) employed for this purpose.

In 1829 Sir Richard Mayne wrote: "The primary object of an efficient police is the prevention of crime: the next that of detection and punishment of offenders if crime is committed. To this all the efforts of police must be directed. The protection of life and property, the preservation of public peace, and the absence of crime, will alone prove whether those efforts have been successful and whether the objects for which the police were appointed have been attained¹."

In police work much depends on the co-operation of the public, and this is always determined by the respect in which the police are held. One of the key principles of modern policing in Britain is that the police seek to work with the people as part of the community.

Police is the body of agents organized to keep civil order and public safety, enforce the law, and investigate crime. Characteristics common to most police forces include a quasi-military organization, a uniformed patrol and traffic-control force, plainclothes divisions for criminal investigations, and enforcement priorities that reflect the community's way of life. Administration may be centralized at the national level, or decentralized with autonomous local police forces. Recruits usually receive specialized training and take an exam. The modern metropolitan (London) police force began with Sir Robert Peel, the state secretary in Britain in 1829. These Police officers are often referred to as 'Bobbies' due to the fact that it was Sir Robert (Bobby) Peel who authorized Metropolitan Police. They were regarded as the forerunners² of a modern Police force and became a model for the police forces in most countries, such as the United States. Bobbies can still be found in many parts of the world (British ex-colonies, for example).

Do you know that "The Old Bill" or "The Bill" is used as slang names for the police? What is the origin of this funny name? The simple answer is that no one really knows for sure. "Old Bill" was King William IV, whose constables were an early form of police. In 1619 the constables of the watch referred to themselves as 'us peacemakers and all our bill of authority'. New laws for the police used to come and keep coming from bills passed through Parliament. Constables of the watch were sometimes nicknamed for the billhooks³ they carried as weapons. So choose the explanation you like the most!

TEXT 2. ORIGINS OF POLICING

The term "police" is associated with departments of a state that are authorized to exercise the police power of that state within a legal or territorial area of responsibility. The word comes via French from the Latin politia ("civil administration"), which itself derives from the Ancient Greek polis ("city"). The first police force comparable to the present-day police was established in 1667 under King Louis XIV in France, although modern police usually trace their origins to the 1800 establishment of the Police in London and the Napoleonic police of Paris, then the largest and the most dangerous city of Europe. The royal edict⁴, registered by the Parliament of Paris on March 15, 1667 created the office of "lieutenant general of police", who was the head of the new Paris police force. Police was given the task to "ensure the peace and quiet of the public and private individuals, clean the city of what may cause disturbances, and have everyone live according to their duties".

The city of Paris was divided into 16 districts policed by the 44 *commissaires de police*⁵, each in a particular district. The scheme of the Paris police force was copied by the rest of France, resulting in the creation of police in all large French towns.

The origin of the British police lies in early tribal history and is based on customs for securing order through appointed representatives (the people were the police). The Saxons brought this system to England and improved and developed the organization. This organized the division of the people into groups of ten, called "tythings"⁶, with a tything-man⁷ as representative of each; and into larger groups, each of ten tythings, under a "hundred-man" who was responsible to the Sheriff of the County⁸.

⁶ tything – десятина.

The tything-man system, after contact with the Normans, changed considerably but was not wholly destroyed. In time the tything-man became the constable and the Sheriff – the Justice of the Peace, to whom the parish⁹ constable was responsible. According to this system, which became widely established in the 17th and 18th centuries, there was one unarmed citizen in each parish who was elected annually to serve for a year as parish constable. He worked in co-operation with the local Justices to keep laws and maintain order. In the towns, responsibility for keeping the order was given to groups of paid citizens, who were known as "The Watch" for guarding the gates and patrolling the streets at night.

In the 18th century came the big social and economic changes and the movement of the population to the towns. The parish constable and "Watch" systems failed and the law-enforcement system was under a serious menace¹⁰. This led to the formation of the "New Police".

Nowadays policing is the activity of enforcing¹¹ the criminal law and it takes place in any society which has such a law. But in most societies people doing the policing also have other functions: traffic regulation, public and social order, safety of citizens. With the exception of the Roman Empire, the existence of 'the police', a separate force to enforce the criminal law, is a product of modern urban society. The establishment of a metropolitan police force in London 1829 is usually seen as the most important event. Police forces covered all of the United Kingdom by 1860 and many other states in Europe did the same.

TEXT 3. POLICE AROUND THE WORLD

In many countries, particularly those with a federal system of government, there may be several police organizations, each serving different levels of government and enforcing different parts of the applicable law. The United States has a highly decentralized and fragmented system of law enforcement, with over 17,000 state and local law enforcement agencies. Other countries, such as Chile, Israel, and Austria, use a centralized system of policing.

Interpol is the world's largest international police organization, with 186 member countries. Created in 1923, it facilitates cross-border police co-operation, and supports and assists all organizations, authorities and services whose mission is to prevent or combat international crime

Interpol aims to facilitate international police co-operation even where diplomatic relations do not exist between particular countries. Action is taken within the limits of existing laws in different countries and in the spirit of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Interpol's constitution prohibits 'any intervention or activities of a political, military, religious or racial character.' Interpol has signed co-operation agreements with the United Nations. Interpol seeks to forge ties with all international bodies, governmental authorities and non-governmental organizations whose mission to fight crime and protect the public's safety.

These collaborations occur formally, through the signing of co-operation agreements and adoption of international conventions, and more informally, through Interpol's participation in international symposia, conferences and working groups, and vice versa.

Most countries are members of the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), established to detect and fight trans-national crime and provide for international co-operation and co-ordination of other police activities. Interpol does not conduct investigations nor arrests by itself, but only serves as a central point for information on crime, suspects and criminals.

A police officer has one of the most important jobs in the world: to serve and protect the people. While they are fighting crime and handling emergencies they probably come across many English speakers. Some may commit crimes, while others may be victims of crime. In both cases, they need to ask and answer questions in English. Their job may also require them to speak to English witnesses. Time can be a key factor in solving a crime or saving a life. They cannot always wait for an interpreter. They should learn vocabulary and phrases that will be useful when they encounter English speakers.

1. What is meant by decentralized and fragmented system of law enforcement?
2. What does Interpol stand for?
3. What are its functions?

Crime – an act which is prohibited by criminal law. Each state sets out a limited series of acts (crimes) which are prohibited and punishes the commission of these acts by a fine, imprisonment or some other form of punishment. In exceptional cases, an omission to act can constitute a crime, such as failing to give assistance to a person in peril¹² or failing to report a case of child abuse.
